22. As discussed in detail in the Endnotes for Chapter 2, William Kidd was born in December 1654, making him thirty-four years old at the time he seized the Sainte Rose from the French on July 29, 1689.
23. Codrington to BOT, Nevis, August 15, 1689, CSPC, v. 13, no. 345. Kidd was voted captain by the Anglo-American privateers who seized the

- Sainte Rose* and was not “appointed” captain by Christopher Codrington, governor-general of the English Leeward Islands. As maritime historian Margarette Lincoln writes, Kidd was “elected to captaincy by his privateering crew just as [Henry] Morgan had been.” (British Pirates and Society, 1680–1730, 121.)

In the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, England did not allow American colonists to mint their own money, so the leading New World currency of the age was the Spanish silver dollar or peso, worth eight reales. The Spanish “piece of eight,” thus, originated from peso de a ocho reales. In the Golden Age of Piracy, coins were valued by their actual weight in gold or silver, not just on their physical appearance. Spanish coins were preferred over other currency of the age because they had a milled, or patterned, edge, which prevented unscrupulous traders from shaving slivers off the coins without detection. The Spanish piece of eight, also known as the Spanish dollar, was the dominant and most widely accepted global currency in the Age of Sail right up to the late eighteenth century.

10. Dr. David Boyles, personal communication, June 2020–September 2024; Boyles Family Tree, Ancestry.com; Mumah, Alphabetical Dictionary. Recent genetic genealogical evidence has shed new light on the family origins of Captain William Kidd. Genetic genealogy using autosomal segments relies on finding a DNA “match” who shares one or more DNA segments with a test-taker. A shared “identical by descent” (IBD) segment has to have been transmitted to the test-taker and to match down through successive generations. The gold standard of genetic genealogy relies on a process known as “triangulation.” Triangulation requires that three or more persons share an identical or significantly overlapping segment of DNA in common and have documented family trees containing a common ancestor from whom that DNA was transmitted down the generations. Shared DNA segments must be of substantial “length” to be statistically valid segments, with 7 centiMorgans (cM) being the minimum threshold length initially considered. A centiMorgan is a relative segment-length that incorporates the statistical probability of a segment being separated during recombination. In practice, true triangulation is a high bar, especially the further one goes back in time, and identifying a segment as being “triangulated” confers upon it a special status. Historical, genealogical, and genetic research conducted by Dr. David A. Boyles, Jack R. Gaines Emeritus Professor of Chemistry of the Department of Chemistry and Applied Biological Sciences of the South Dakota School of Mines and Technology, drawing upon the genealogical work of Sandra E. H. Mumah and others, confirms that Captain William Kidd (William Kidd IV) was born in 1654, in Soham Parish, Cambridgeshire, England; and that his biological father and mother were Reverend William Kidd III (b. October 20, 1622, Soham Parish, England, d. April 1693, Calvert, Maryland), and Margaret Mary Deare Kidd (b. March 26, 1625, Soham, d. March 24, 1727, Middlesex, Virginia). The parish records obtained by Dr. Boyles indicate that Captain William Kidd's official recorded birth date is December 27, 1654, in Soham Parish, Cambridgeshire, England. In Boyles's DNA study, two techniques—shared cluster analysis and triangulation—were utilized to examine the DNA results of a primary female test-taker (born in 1921) at both Ancestry© and Family Tree DNA©, respectively. The female test-taker was, prior to the testing, considered a highly probable eighth-great-granddaughter of Captain William Kidd (William Kidd IV) and Sarah Bradley (1670–1744), wife of Captain Kidd, based on extensive genealogical analysis conducted by Dr. Boyles, Mumah, and others. The results of Dr. Boyles's shared cluster analysis successfully demonstrated a common Kidd ancestor of both the colonial Virginia and Maryland Kidd genealogical families. This common Kidd family ancestor must necessarily be, or predate, Reverend William Kidd III (b. 1622), who migrated from England to Calvert, Maryland, prior to 1688 when his son William Kidd IV (Captain Kidd) put down roots in New York City. Secondly, successful triangulation of the probable female Captain William Kidd ancestor (primary test-taker) demonstrated her descent from the Bradley line since this individual matched three descendants of William Bradley (b. 1619 in Bingley, Yorkshire, England, d. 1691, New Haven, Connecticut), the documented brother of Captain Samuel Bradley (1620–1704), the father of Sarah Bradley (1670–1744). Sarah Bradley was Captain Kidd's wife from May 16, 1691, to May 23, 1701, though they had known one another since at least 1688. The DNA segment lengths based on the start and end loci for the Bradley descendants were 25.8, 10.1, and 14.6 centiMorgans. To ascertain whether all three also matched one another and therefore were a true, triangulated match, one-to-one comparisons were made at GEDmatch with the conclusion that each matched the other in addition to the primary test-taker, demonstrating triangulation. Taken together, these DNA results indicate that the primary test-taker is also the descendant of a Kidd/Bradley ancestral couple, namely Captain William Kidd IV and Sarah Bradley.

- ii. Dr. David Boyles, personal communication, June 2020–September 2024; Boyles Family Tree, Ancestry.com; HCA 13/81, 313, PRO; Proceedings of the Lords of Trade concerning Mr. Livingston's Petition, August 28, 1695, and September 14, 1695, NYCD, v. 4, 127–128 and 129–130; Bellomont to BOT, July 26, 1699, CO 5/860, no. 64, fol. 154–155, PRO; Hoff, English Origins, 179; Filby, Passenger and Immigration Lists, England 1695; Dobson, Scots, 57, Scottish Emigration, 47, Scottish Genealogy, xii. Though born in Soham, England, Captain William Kidd (William Kidd IV) has a definite connection to Scotland, and Dundee in particular. The most critical piece of evidence comes from Kidd's visit to London to obtain a royal privateering commission in the summer of 1695. Kidd sailed into the busy seaport on his merchantman Antigua in late July and testified before the Lords of Trade and Plantations on August 28 and September 14 regarding New York governor Benjamin Fletcher. On his port of entry record, Kidd gave his age as forty-one years old, which would make his year of birth 1654. During his subsequent testimony before the Lords of Trade, Kidd was sworn in and gave his age and where he grew up but not his actual birth place or birth date: “William Kidd of the city of New York in America where he has lived for space of six years, originally from Dundee in the Kingdom of Scotland, 41 years of age.” Researchers have also pointed out that Kidd named a young male servant he acquired in Port Dolphin, Madagascar, “Dundee” during his 1696–1699 Indian Ocean expedition, and that he was friends or acquaintances with several prominent American Scots. These men include his New York lawyer James Emott; his New York neighbor and business partner Robert Livingston; New York attorney general James Graham, who wrote a letter of introduction on his behalf to English diplomat Sir William Blathwayt; and Bostonian Duncan Campbell, deputy postmaster of the Province of Massachusetts Bay. Finally, historical records appear to indicate that, in 1699 when Kidd’s life was on the line, he reportedly considered sailing away with his family to the new Scottish settlement in the Bay of Darien in Central America, which has been interpreted to imply a Scottish ancestry. While these secondary lines of evidence suggest that Kidd did indeed have a connection to Scotland at an early age that made a lasting impression on him and gave him a sense of connectedness, they do not prove that Kidd was an actual born-and-bred Scotsman. In fact, there is no Scottish lineage for the legendary sea captain verified through genealogical and DNA analyses. However, he does appear to have believed that he was “originally from” Dundee because he moved there at an early age as an English emigrant to Scotland. William Kid (not Kidd or Kydd) is the name given for the baptismal record dated January 22, 1654, in Dundee, Angus, Scotland. This record has never been confirmed by scientifically rigorous DNA analysis or triangulation.

12. There are two lines of evidence that Kidd was an experienced Caribbean buccaneer like Sir Henry Morgan. First, he signed on as a privateer aboard the French vessel Sainte Rose in early 1689 at Île-à-Vache off Hispaniola, a well-established buccaneer base of operations. French Hispaniola and its nearby islands of Tortuga and Île-à-Vache, as well as Petit-Goâve and Tiburon on the southwest coast of Hispaniola, served as both a staging area and refuge for the buccaneers from the 1660s through the 1680s, when Kidd was active. These were the commerce-raiding strongholds that evolved from the original French boucaniers, along with Port Royal, Jamaica, and the islets off the southern coast of Cuba. The second line of evidence is that throughout the course of his privateering career, he drew upon buccaneering ships’ articles. Kidd’s written articles used in 1691,

- 1695, and 1696–1699—governing the distribution of crew shares, codes of behavior, punishments for cowardice, thievery, and other infractions, “workmen’s compensation” for combat injuries, democratic voting procedures, and the like—bear a striking resemblance to the articles published by the Dutch–French surgeon Alexander Olivier Exquemelin for the buccaneers in the age of Morgan.

In September 1696, Captain Kidd sailed with at least one free black colonial African American seaman, one Native American seaman, and one Jewish passenger/novice seaman on the Adventure Galley, and he added another “Black” cook to his crew in April 1697. These historically marginalized figures were voluntary, share-earning crew members aboard Kidd’s ship, having signed privateering articles that closely followed the democratic articles of the Caribbean buccaneers.

Henry Every and his pirates were motivated by religious and racial bigotry against the Indian men and women they severely mistreated on board the Ganj-i-Sawai. Fear and intolerance of Islam were widespread in England and the American colonies, and dark-skinned Muslim heathens from the East who prayed to a non-Christian God were considered subhuman and treated accordingly. At the same time, it should be noted that King Aurangzeb and his fellow Muslims in India were just as bigoted as their European counterparts. In the late seventeenth century, they contemptuously described white Christian Europeans who did not share their skin color, religious beliefs, or culture as “impure,” “infidels,” and “misbelievers.”

5. Grey to Admiralty, June 19, 1699, ADM 1/4086, fol. 551, PRO; Nanfan to Bellomont, June 5, 1699, CSPC, v. 17, no. 740xiii; Luttrell, Historical Relation, v. 4, 543, 578; Stokes, Iconography, v. 4, 420; Lincoln, British Pirates, 40–42. In June 1699, without a shred of evidence, Governor Ralph Grey of Barbados claimed that Kidd had amassed £400,000 in booty ($140,000,000 today), while Robert Livingston, also without proof, claimed that Kidd had £500,000 in sterling ($175,000,000 today) in his possession. By November 1699, London's most egregious gossip, the former member of Parliament and diarist Narcissus Luttrell, estimated Kidd's treasure or "effects" at a less-inflated yet still eye-opening £200,000 ($70,000,000 today).
